[2]3. Thomas Nagel argues that duties of socioeconomic justice are the exclusive concern of sovereign states (and their citizens) in relation to their own (fellow) citizens. In relation to citizens of other countries, a sovereign state only has negative duties not to enslave, coerce, or violate civil liberties as well as the positive duties of humanitarian assistance and rescue. See Thomas Nagel, "The Problem of Global Justice," Philosophy & Public Affairs, 33, 2 (2005).

[2]4. Pogge, World Poverty and Human Rights, 2. Cf. Thomas Nagel, "The Problem of Global Justice," Philosophy & Public Affairs, 33, 2 (2005), 118. The first paragraph of the United Nations Development Programme's Human Development Report 2005 drives home a similar point but without Pogge's important reminder of global disparities:

The tsunami was a highly visible, unpredictable and largely unpreventable tragedy. Other tragedies are less visible, monotonously predictable and readily preventable. Every hour more than 1,200 die away from the glare of media attention. This is equivalent to three tsunamis a month, every month, hitting the world's most vulnerable citizens—its children. The causes of death vary, but the overwhelming majority can be traced to a single pathology: poverty. Unlike the tsunami, that pathology is preventable. With today's technology, financial resources and accumulated knowledge, the world has the capacity to overcome extreme deprivation. Yet as an international community we allow poverty to destroy lives on a scale that dwarfs the impact of the tsunami (United Nations Development Programme, Human Development Report 2005 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005).

[2]5. Des Gasper is particularly eloquent in articulating the widely shared assumption that development agents face alternative paths and that development ethics emphasizes "value-conscious ways of thinking about and choosing between alternative paths and destinations" (Gasper, The Ethics of Development, xi).

Whether development that reduces poverty also reduces humiliation depends on whether poverty is more than lack of income and whether a distinction is made between well-being (ill-being) and agency or empowerment (lack of agency). I owe this point to Des Gasper.

56. For a response to what he calls "economism," see Gasper, The Ethics of Development, especially chap. 3. Stephen Schwenke and Ada Pizze of the Inter-American Development Bank's "Initiative for Social Capital, Ethics, and Development," persistently criticize development ethics for failing to deal with the moral issues of practitioners in the development trenches. For arguments that the concept of poverty, the ideal of participation, and the practice of development and development ethics are tools of Western imperialism, see The Development Dictionary, ed. Wofgang Sachs (London: Zed, 1992).

57. Sympathetic and largely constructive critics include Jesús Conill, "Capacidades humanas," Glosario para una sociedad intercultural, ed. Jesús Conill (Valencia: Bancaja, 2002), 29---34; Horizontes de economía ética: Aristoteles, Adam Smith, Amartya Sen (Madrid: Editorial Tecnos, 2004); Adela Cortina, Por una etica del consumo; and Phillip Pettit, "Capability: A Defence of Sen," Economics and Philosophy, 17 (2001): 1---20. In Chapter 7 not only do I accept much of Cortina's criticisms of my earlier prudential version of the capability orientation, but I improve my earlier view by modifying it in the light of her Kantian consumption ethic. Sen accepts the thrust of some (but only some) of Pettit's alternatives in "Reply," Economics and Philosophy, 17 (2001): 51---56. Other recent critics are less supportive. They include Robert Sugden, "Welfare, Resources and Capabilities: A Review of Inequality Reexamined by Amartya Sen," Journal of Economic Literature, 31 (1993): 947---62; Richard J. Arneson, "Equality and Equal Opportunity for Welfare," Philosophical Studies, 56 (1989): 77---93, and "Perfectionism and Politics," Ethics, 111, 1 (2000): 37---63, John Roemer, Theories of Distributive Justice (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1996). For assessments of Nussbaum, see essays by Louise M. Antony, Arneson (referred to above), Hilary Charlesworth, and Richard Mulgan in "Symposium on Martha Nussbaum's Political Philosophy" Ethics, 111, 1 (2000). Nussbaum responds to these four assessments in "Aristotle, Politics, and Human Capabilities: A Response to Antony, Arneson, Charelsworth, and Mulgan," Ethics, 111, 1 (2000): 102---40. Three collections include important evaluations of both Sen's and Nussbaum's work on the capability orientation: Women, Culture and Development: A Study of Human Capabilities, eds.

61. I thank Ingrid Robyns for discussions bearing on this paragraph.

62. Several authors utilize one or the other and often both of these strategies. See

Séverine Deneulin, "Perfectionism, Paternalism and Liberalism in Sen and Nussbaum's Capability Approach," Review of Political Economy, 14, 4 (2002): 497---518; Des Gasper, "Development as Freedom: Moving Economics beyond Commodities – the Cautious Boldness of Amartya Sen," Journal of International Development, 12, 7

(2000): 989---1001; "Is Sen's Capability Approach an Adequate Basis for Considering

Human Development?" Review of Political Economy, 14, 4 (2002): 435---61;

an Ethics of Human Development," Working Paper (The Hague: Institute of Social Studies, 2003); Mozaffar Quizilbash, "Development, Common Foes, and Shared

Values," Review of Political Economy, 14, 4 (2002): 463---80. Most of the articles in Feminist Economics, 9, 2-3 (2003) freshly assess Sen's work "through the lens of gender" and seek to mediate differences between Sen and Nussbaum. Especially important is Ingrid Robeyns, "Sen's Capability Approach and Gender Inequality: Selecting Relevant Capabilities," Feminist Economics, 9, 2-3 (2003): 61---92 in which Robeyns argues against one and only one list and argues for specific lists for particular purposes and contexts. See, also, Sabina Alkire, Valuing Freedoms: Sen's Capability Approach and Poverty Reduction (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002); and "Public Debate and Value Constuction in Sen's Approach," in Capabilities Equality, ed. Kaufman. Although closer to Sen than to Nussbaum, Alkire argues for some uses of lists. She also draws creatively on some ideas of John Finnis, a theorist outside the capability orientation.

63. The variety of democratic theory known as "deliberative democracy" also is in danger of becoming a new scholasticism. One way to guard against this threat, which I will refer to and employ in Chapters 9 and 10, is to bring the theory of deliberative democracy into critical dialogue with other democratic theories and with institutional experiments in deliberative democracy.

64. My views in this paragraph owe much to discussions with Ingrid Robeyns.
